Financial affidavit and property settlement

Each spouse must complete a financial affidavit. The document, which lists each spouse's income, expenses, assets and debts is filed in the court records. Here's the information you need to gather to fill yours out:

Income and expenses

Use the worksheet on page 2 to figure out your household budget on either a monthly or annual basis.

Assets

Use the worksheet on page 3 to put together an overall inventory of your property and determine which assets you own.

You'll also need to divide your marital property. States have different laws regarding property distribution.

It may be helpful to find out how your state determines what each of you will get if you take your divorce case before a judge. Then you can use that information as a guide for dividing your marital assets. Or you may want to look over your list and decide together who gets what. Some couples may want to try a trade approach, where one spouse agrees to take an item or items considered equal in value to those the other spouse chooses to keep.

Debts

In a divorce, joint debt is considered marital property. You should carefully determine which debts are individual and which you share.

You and your spouse may want to order credit reports to figure out who's responsible for which debts.

KEY POINTS

Here's how to help you figure out what each of you owns ("separate") versus what you own together ("marital"):

Separate property

- Items you brought into the marriage
- Items you inherited during the marriage
- Items you received as gifts during the marriage

Marital property

- Anything (except personal gifts or an inheritance) acquired during the marriage, no matter whose name it's in

- In some states, any increase in the value of separate property, no matter whose name it's in

Be sure to review this checklist with your investment professional and lawyer to ensure an equitable property settlement.

This material should be used as helpful hints only. Each person's situation is different. You should consult your investment professional or other relevant professional before making any decisions.

After your divorce

Make sure to revise your legal documents and policies after your divorce to reflect your marital status change. Here are some items to review and potentially change or revise:

- Will
- Trusts
- Guardianship
- Insurance policies
- Income tax exemptions
- Retirement asset beneficiary
